manity stood expectant, yet patient, for the uneral column. A drimling rain, alternated by an occasional heavy shower, fell from the lowering sky, which every mo ment grow darker and more threatening, and the chilly atmosphere added its disagreeable character to the general inclemency. Yot under all this, which upon any othe ecasion would have been as successful as ould the charge of a battalion in clearing out the people, there was no sign of impatience, no disquietude in the large and constantly awelling assembly, but all was characterized by that order and quiet which the solemn character of the occasion demanded, and which is a distinguished mark of the intelligence and moderation of our people at such times.

Slowly the steeple clock that overlooke the assembled thousands measured the minutes that brought nearer the looked for hour, and every one of those minutes was marked. The deep-toned booming of the cannon, and the solemn tolling of the of the ashes of the martyred President, and the eager gaze of the multitude was turned niently up Superior Street, to catch the first appearance of the procession. But there was no bustle, no sibowing and jostling of each other, but almost motionless amid the still pouring rain stood these thousands of mourners, irrespective of age, sex or condition, their hearts filled with the same common grief, and their heads bowed under the same feelings of reverentiel respect for the bonored dead. THE PROCESSION APPEARS. At just five minutes past nine o'clock, the into Superior street, and the plaintive dirges of the bands fell with solemn portent upon the ear, mingled with the impressive olling of the church bells, broken at intervals by the booming of the minute guns Slowly and with measured tread the column drew nearer, and finally the escort, military and civil, followed by the hearse, entered the gate of the enclosed space, which was at once closed upon the auxious assembly without. The 29-h Regiment parted t the right and left, a portion being sasigned to guard duty, the remainder facing the hearse and presenting arms as it passed to the Square. The Band advanced to within the Equare, and taking position to the left, performed a dirge as the civil escort moved on to the temple where there mains were to lie, and during the conveyance of the hearse to the catafalque. Upo the arrival of the hearse at the entrance to Governor O. P. Morton, of Indians, and the Square, the body guard, consisting of a ompany of the Veteran Reserve Corps, were drawn up in line on each side of the hearse to the rear, and twelve of the num per received the coffin upon their shoulder and bore it to its temporary resting place. As soon as it had been deposited upon the catafuloue the face of the dead was uncovered by the undertaker and embalmers, Simultaneously with this a committee Reserve Corps.

APPEARANCE AND NUMBER OF THE CROWD

There were probably never before gathered together in the city of Cleveland, in common participation, so varied a crowd as were assembled here and looked upon the remains of the dead President yesterday. There were no social lines, no boundaries between condition, separating those church bells, at last announced the arrival who in solemn pageant moved past the coffin that held the mortal parts of Abraham Lincoln. The banker and merchant walked side by side with the laborer, the lady of fashion and estate with the lowly yard streets to the funeral train, stationed kitchen maid, and none thought aught of at the foot of the latter. The coffin was the association. All felt in those solemn removed from the hearse by eight members noments how weak is man, how of the military Guard of Honor, while the shallow are all his vanities, how rest of the members walked on either side valueless is his power with drawn swords as the remains were deutterly taken into account when that of the Omnip stent, and leaving pride of position, and the worldly power that wealth and place give, behind them, met on a common level as mortals bending before a common God. The position of the coffin was such that the spectator got a close and full view of the face and the upper part of the head.
